Walt Disney Archives: 50 Years of Preserving the Magic

“I’ve always had the feeling and I’ve always felt that there’s a thing that schools should put more emphasis on…that is how to research” – Walt Disney.

It should come as no surprise that Walter Elias Disney, the man responsible for so many beloved films, television shows, and the beginnings of Disney Parks and Resorts, understood the importance of research. After all, many of Walt’s projects were inspired by books that he grew up reading or gathered on one of his trips around the globe. Today, the Walt Disney Company remains steeped in creative storytelling processes—almost all of which start with research.

This year the Walt Disney Company is honoring the 50th anniversary of the Walt Disney Archives, along with the inventive work of its archival staff. Established on June 22, 1970, by Dave Smith, a librarian and archivist from UCLA, the Archives collects, preserves, and makes available for research the historical materials relating to Walt Disney and the company he founded. As the creative genius behind the beginnings of the Company, Walt naturally plays an important role in both company and departmental culture to this day. In fact, Smith was initially hired by Walt’s older brother Roy O. Disney to inventory and document Walt’s offices for future historical reference.

The documentation of Walt’s offices was incredibly in depth, and Dave, as he recalled, “listed every chair, table, and desk, but also every book on the bookcase, every paperclip in the desk drawers…” in exacting detail. Throughout this process, it became apparent that there was a tremendous amount of history surrounding the Company that needed to be preserved, so, Dave single-handedly set out creating the Archives. Even now, some 50 years later, Dave’s original inventory is still one of the most important founding documents to the department! This foundational work proved invaluable in 2015 when the Archives received approval from Disney Chairman and CEO Bob Iger to convert Walt’s original office suite into a permanent museum space, reinstalling furnishings back almost exactly to the way they were left in the 1960s. Using Dave’s original inventory to guide the process helped to bring the story of the Archives full circle.

What started 50 years ago as a team of one in a single office has now grown to a team of 30 employees with multiple warehouses around the greater Los Angeles area. The collection includes more than 12,000 boxes of documents and merchandise, nearly 12,000 cataloged Disney books, a library of more than 20 million historic photographs, and several thousand historic props and costume pieces; the department’s treasures range from assets as small as the story script from Steamboat Willie (1928) to attraction vehicles from Disney Parks and Resorts.

The collection is divided into 10 distinct areas: corporate history, Walt and Roy Disney, filmed entertainment, publicity materials, photographs, oral histories, publications, music, consumer products, and theme parks. Led by Director Rebecca Cline, the department is divided into five teams: collections, digitization, exhibitions, photo library, and research. With the Walt Disney Company’s recent acquisition of 20th Century Fox in 2019, the Archives has completely integrated Fox’s historical studio collections and welcomed its talented team.

Kicking off its yearlong celebration last month with the opening of “Inside the Walt Disney Archives: 50 Years of Preserving the Magic” at the Bowers Museum in Santa Ana, California, the department will be celebrating its golden milestone with various events throughout the year. On display from March 7 to August 30, 2020, the all-new exhibit will include a range of historical assets from the collection, including artwork, the very first ticket sold to Disneyland Park, and a few surprises. The exhibit will be accompanied by various lectures by the Walt Disney Archives staff and select Disney historians, as well. For tickets and additional information, please visit bowers.org.
The department will also be hosting monthly screenings of classic Disney films at the El Capitan Theatre in Hollywood. Guests will be treated to limited-time displays and special introductions that further show off elements of its legendary collection. For those outside the Southern California area, the Archives’ “Heroes & Villains: The Art of Disney Costume” exhibit, which debuted at D23 Expo 2019, will be opening October 2020 at MoPOP in Seattle!

For questions about their celebration, including the most up-to-date event information, please contact the Walt Disney Archives at Disney.archives@disney.com. You can also follow along on Facebook and Instagram for a peek inside the collection!

At the end of February, I submitted my President’s Message for the Spring newsletter where I spent most of my time detailing the upcoming 2020 Western Archivists Meeting (WAM) that was scheduled to be held in San Francisco from April 22nd – 25th. Much has changed in the world since I wrote that letter due to the COVID-19 pandemic including the official cancellation of WAM 2020 on March 16th. This was a difficult, but necessary decision given the impact of this outbreak worldwide and within the state of California. The health and safety of our members always remained at the forefront of our decision making and behind the scenes work to either cancel or postpone the conference began well before this official announcement. As you can imagine, it takes time to work through a scenario like this when there are four organizations involved and a hotel contract in place to contend with. At no point were any of the organization’s leaders willing to put their memberships at risk, though, even in the face of catastrophic financial losses that would have jeopardized the existence of all four organizations. For this I would like to commend my fellow members of the SCA Board along with the leadership of the Conference of Inter-Mountain Archivists (CIMA), Northwest Archivists (NWA), and Society of Rocky Mountain Archivists (SRMA) on their thoughtful and informed approach to a situation that none of us anticipated or were prepared to deal with.

At this point, I don’t have any information on when the western regional archival associations will come together for another joint meeting. Information on this will be communicated when it is available. Additionally, per the SCA bylaws there is to be a Members Meeting held annually which was scheduled for during WAM. The SCA Board is currently looking into available technologies to host this meeting online later in the year, so stay tuned for more information on that in the coming months.

My time as SCA President is nearing its end and this will be my last President’s Message. I would just like to say that I am proud of the work completed this year, specifically with regards to the ethics and inclusion policies/procedures established for our organization, the streamlining of some committees, and the attention we’ve started to direct toward labor issues within the profession. The foundation we’ve set this year will help carry this work forward in the years ahead. These are uncertain times and we are headed into an uncertain future, but I am confident that some things will remain unchanged. One of those being, that SCA will continue to serve as an outlet for archivists throughout California to come together in support of one another, our communities, and our profession. Stay healthy and stay safe out there, everyone!

Uncovering the "Carpinteria Chronicle"

On October 19, 2018, UC Santa Barbara Library Special Research Collections acquired a largely forgotten weekly newspaper, the Carpinteria Chronicle.

Published from 1933 to 1939, the Chronicle was short-lived, in contrast to its more established competitor, the Carpinteria Herald, which would circulate for many more years. This was not for lack of editorial ambition.

In its inaugural edition of February 23, 1933, we read that “…the Carpinteria Chronicle enters the Santa Barbara County journalistic field with a definite policy of optimism and progressiveness, of truth and loyalty to its people—a policy which demands the unbiased publication of all the news of the Carpinteria Valley and its adjacent territory.”

The Carpinteria Chronicle covers daily life in the valley and town of Carpinteria, situated between the ocean and the mountains ten miles south of Santa Barbara. Much of the news concerns agriculture—lemons were the primary export, followed by walnuts and lima beans. Droughts, floods, water projects, subsidies, and farm relief are all topics covered, as well as local, state, and federal politics, high school sports, entertainment, movies, and local fairs.

In addition, the Chronicle reports on the issue of school segregation in Carpinteria (an issue the Carpinteria Herald largely ignores) with the construction of the Aliso School for “Mexican” children in 1934. George Bliss, Carpinterian, State Assembly member, and author of the failed Bliss Bill (whose object was to legalize the separation of people of Mexican heritage in California schools) offers support in the Chronicle for the construction of the Aliso School.

Some eighty-four years after the construction of the Aliso School, and seventy-four years after the last issue of the Chronicle, Carpinterian Joe Escareño discovered the 141 issues (bound, in three volumes) in the attic of his aunt’s home. The first volume, Volume I, contained fifty weekly issues, from February 1933 to February 1934. The second volume, Volume II, contained forty issues, from February 1934 to December of that same year. The third volume, Volume IV, contained fifty-two issues, from February 1938 to February 1939.
Escareño brought the three bound volumes to the attention of retired educator and Carpinteria historian Jim Campos, who recognized the importance of the discovery immediately. After consulting with Campos and staff at UC Santa Barbara, Escareño generously donated the volumes to Special Research Collections, under the condition that they be accessible to the public.

The rarity and fragile state of the volumes ruled out the possibility of providing access to the physical issues themselves. Working with an outside vendor, Special Research Collections was able to digitize the volumes following archival standards, and without any damage to the original material.

Special Research Collection’s 141 issues of the Carpinteria Chronicle are freely available to the public on the UCSB Library Alexandria Digital Research Library https://alexandria.ucsb.edu/collections/f3kh0rxf.

UC Santa Barbara Library Special Research Collections is grateful to Joe Escareño, Jim Campos, and the community of Carpinteria.

The Armenian Women’s Archives Seeks Member for Advisory Council

We are an archives without walls located in Berkeley, California. Founded in 1988, we deal with collections, books, and CDs of women who are part or all Armenian, or married to an Armenian. We place materials in archival repositories or libraries of research universities. These are primarily in California, but we just placed the important collection of Helene Pilibosian, poetess and cultural worker, from Watertown, MA in the Schlesinger Library at Harvard University.

Both Armenian and non-Armenian archivists are heartily welcome on the Advisory Council.

Shedding Light on Local History

Thanks to a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the USC Libraries have spent the past year collaborating with six Southern California community archives to digitize, preserve, and host collections in the USC Digital Library. The six archives belong to the LA as Subject research alliance of 230 archives and collections hosted by the USC Libraries. The LA as Subject Community Histories Digitization Project sheds light on “less-visible” narratives of Southern California and Los Angeles history.

The collections span a variety of formats, from still images to videos to three-dimensional objects: Emma Lazarus Jewish Women’s Clubs Records from the Southern California Library for Social Studies and Research (SCL) documenting work by a collective of Jewish women active in the civil rights movement; objects from the Filipino American Library (FAL) Collection, including educational materials and photographs of prominent Filipino-Americans; 450 videos of sermons by Reverend Cecil “Chip” Murray from the First African Methodist Episcopal (FAME) Church of Los Angeles between 1984 and 2004; Go for Broke National Education Center’s (GFB) Hiroshi Sugiyama Collection of cultural objects from a Japanese-American U.S. Army medic killed in action during World War II and Hanashi Oral History Program of video testimonies from Japanese-American WWII veterans; cultural objects from the Workman and Temple Family Homestead Museum, including photographs, postcards, theater broadsides, and ephemera representing Latinx and Asian-American communities between 1830 and 1930; and the Pasadena Museum of History’s Black History Collection of photographs and ephemera documenting the daily lives of African-Americans in Pasadena in the early 20th century.

As the project’s sole metadata librarian, I leveraged metadata created by partners as much as possible. However, crosswalking from different schemas did not eliminate the ethical dilemmas. For example, the schema GFB uses in its Omeka site includes fields such as “Unit of Service” and “Campaigns/Battles.” While there were no direct crosswalks in the USC Digital Library’s schema, this is important information. I had to determine the best field in our schema to store it. To replicate the Omeka database as much as possible, I concatenated the field heading with its information and inserted it into the Description field so users would see “Unit of Service: 100th Infantry Battalion/442nd Regimental Combat Team (Combined)” and “Campaigns/Battles: Southern France Campaign, Champagne Campaign” in each object’s parent record. This ensures the preservation of important information about the veterans and their stories that can contribute to searchability, while still conforming to the USC Digital Library’s schema.

Additionally, the project raises interesting issues for post-custodial models for building digital library collections. The USC Libraries did not determine the selection process by each archive, nor do we own any of the objects. Our community archive partners selected the objects—some partners came to this project with specific collections in mind, whereas others selected as the project got underway. This ensured that the objects reflected the interests and stories that these organizations wanted to tell about their own communities, rather than any narratives imposed by USC Libraries. The post-custodial model helps to right some of the intrinsic power differentials—although the USC Digital Library hosts the digital objects, the partner archives retain all rights and ownership of their objects and the digital copies. Researchers consulting the objects must cite the original archive, and the Digital Library directs follow-up questions to our community partners. The USC Digital Repository provides archival-quality storage and preservation of these files in perpetuity, but partner archives retain archival files to ensure historical and cultural resources stay within their communities.
In the future, we want to build on this trust to collaborate with these six partners and other small archives from the LA as Subject alliance to shed light on previously less well-known parts of Los Angeles history. Projects like this allow us to use the USC Libraries’ resources to support the greater Los Angeles community and uphold our professional obligations as archivists and librarians. If our professions' core values include an embrace of “diversity” and “responsible custody” practices, then we should actively pursue initiatives to ensure a full and fair historical record.

The Bancroft Library Receives Two Major Grant Awards

The Bancroft Library is pleased to announce two major grant awards to digitize important and heavily used archival collections.

In the fall, we received our fifth grant from the National Park Service’s Japanese American Confinement Sites (JACS) program for our proposal, WRA Form 26: Preserving and Expanding Access to the Individual Records of the Japanese Americans Interned during World War II.

The two-year project will digitize an entire set of Form 26 records (~210,000 items), representing the Individual Records of Japanese Americans incarcerated in the War Relocation Authority-administered camps. While the data on the original forms was extracted onto punch cards during WWII and later coded into a data file in the 1960s at Berkeley, the early punch card coding and other transformations that the original data file has undergone over the decades has resulted in inconsistencies, data loss, and omission of information.

The original paper forms in The Bancroft Library are, to the best of our knowledge, the only remaining complete set of the Form 26 records, compiled by camp, still in existence.

This project will create a long term digital archive of the form records, as well as extract new, more accurate datasets. Working with a data scientist and a Community Advisory Group as part of developing these new research resources, we will make the data widely available. The project will run through August 2021 and bring the total count of items digitized with support from the JACS program to over 750,000. The results will be linked to our project site here: https://bancroft.berkeley.edu/collections/jacs/index.html

In January, we also received a CLIR Digitizing Hidden Collections grant for our proposal, Land, Wealth and Power: Private Land Claims in California, ca. 1852 -1892. This two-year project will digitize the “Documents Pertaining to the Adjudication of Private Land Claims in California” or Land Case Files (~127000 items). The Land Case Files are heavily used by current land owners, genealogists, historians, and environmentalists. Over 1450 original diseños, plats, and surveys associated with these cases were digitized in 2004. Together these resources tell an important story about California land use, ownership, and the environment, and help us understand the distribution of land, wealth, and power in the state and the concept of justice in early California. While a handful of the Land Case Files were digitized in the past, in this project we propose to digitize the remaining 847 cases which, along with the already digitized maps, will create a comprehensive online resource on this important topic.

The award will support a two year project to create a long term digital archive of the private land claims records. The project will run from May 2020 - April 2022.

We are incredibly grateful to the National Park Service and CLIR for supporting our work and helping us to make these important historical records available online to serve current and future generations of researchers and the public.

Linking Records in a Non-Relational Database

The digital asset management system (DAMS) at the Susanne Kester Archives at the Skirball Cultural Center (SCC) is Extensis Portfolio, which is flexible and robust, especially considering its modest price tag. But recently we were stymied by one of its few drawbacks: its non-relational database. Simply stated, there is no built-in way to indicate that records are related or to link them together; no way to leave a trail of breadcrumbs between records. The flat database had not presented a functional challenge until we began describing a collection of digitized building plans.

About a decade ago, paper architectural plans of the buildings on SCC’s 13-acre campus were digitized and stored in folders on an internal server. The scans and folders were organized by the engineering department, who are one of the primary users of the collection, and they are not easy to navigate without intimate knowledge of the SCC’s history and infrastructure. Archives staff have been working to address this lack of access by importing the digitized plans into Portfolio and applying metadata so the plans can be searched.

Building and architectural plans can undergo numerous changes or revisions before they are finalized. We discovered during assessment that our holdings contain multiple versions of some drawings, the versions of which are not identified in a consistent way. As a result, simply noting the revision number does not guarantee that users will be able to tell how many other records relate to the drawing in question. Since Portfolio does not have the structure to link the records, related drawings cannot be found without designing a new search.

With the help of graduate-school intern Katherine Schlesinger, we determined a way to indicate that related records exist and to allow users to access them without designing a new search. Using a feature in Portfolio that allows administrators to create new search fields, we established a text string search field that accommodates multiple values. We named the field Related Documents and entered the unique identifier(s) assigned to each record by Portfolio (the Asset ID Number) of the records related to the drawing. Clicking on one of the Asset ID Numbers triggers a new search for that unique number, taking users to the related record assigned that Asset ID Number.

This solution is successful, for the most part. We can see that there are records related to a building plan and can navigate to the linked files. The change was quick and easy to implement, incurred no hard costs, and required minimal staff time.

But like most work-around solutions, there are drawbacks. We can't search for related records across catalogs, which is Portfolio's term for collections. So, when we have materials about the same event present in different catalogs there is no quick click-and-search that will round up all of them.

Most surprising is the fact that this method works best with more than two records. If only two records are linked, the search becomes self-referential. If we have Record A and Record B, and we click on the Asset ID Number for Record A, the only record in the search results will be Record B. We think the search is looking for all the records with the Asset ID Number in the Related Documents field which, in a two-record link, leads searches back to the original record.

We have implemented this linking field in two other catalogs so far and it is proving useful. Though inelegant, the method is effective. We can create relationships in Portfolio’s flat database, leaving a trail of breadcrumbs to lead us to related records.

New Guidelines for SCA Member-Initiated Events

Through its member-initiated events (MIE), SCA offers support for members to bring California archivists together for networking, discussion forums, site visits, special speakers, mini-conferences, and more. The guidelines for proposing MIEs have recently been updated to offer more flexibility on qualifying expenses that can be paid for and/or reimbursed by SCA. Types of expenses include non-alcoholic refreshments, meals, speakers/facilitators and panelists, facilities/equipment, and webinar fees.

One of the most important changes is the simplified formula for refreshment reimbursements. Use your sign in sheet or your RSVP list to get your per person reimbursement for non-alcoholic refreshments. You won’t be stuck covering the cost of food out of pocket if some of your RSVPs can’t make it or if attendance is better than expected. SCA members and non-members count equally so archivist and non-archivist colleagues can mingle and learn together.

For example, 50 people RSVP for a happy hour organized for area archivists and allied professionals. The organizer orders $250 ($5 x 50 people) in appetizers for all of the expected attendees, but only 40 people are actually able to attend. In this case the host would submit their RSVP list along with receipts for refreshments to be reimbursed for the full amount expended of $250.

Go to https://www.calarchivists.org/MemberEvents to see all of the new guidelines, and propose a member-initiated event today! Just fill out the proposal form and email it to memberevents@calarchivists.org.
